As a photographer at The Cleveland Institute of Art my interest in pattern and color led to the collage format. Although produced on paper, many of those works resembled abstract quilt designs. Increasing complexity revealed severe limitations with mechanical collage assemblies, and I experimented with xerographic transfers to fabric as a technique to integrate a multi-image process. Those pieces in some cases became canvases for further enhancement through the application of paint or other materials, and in all instances a successful piece required the introduction of contour and texture.

Most of the fabric productions are based on my original photographs. In some instances a photograph is not used and images are directly produced by xerography, usually from body parts. All of my recent work emphasizes assemblies and color, and much of it is focused on persons rather than things or abstractions.
